

BARAT

One of the important and fun ceremonies is the arrival of the groom on the day of the wedding, at the venue. The procession is attended by all the relatives and friends from the groom's side. The groom is seated on a decorated horse or an elephant for reaching the venue. Groom's friends and relatives are called the 'baraati'. Everybody dances on the tunes of the song and music played by the band accompanying them. This way the flock rejoices for the reason that an eligible bachelor of their family will finally start his new life, along with his life partner. Amongst all the celebration, the baraat eventually reaches the marriage spot, where the family members of the bride, awaits them. The wedding baraat is held with high esteem and the baratis are pampered by the bride's family, when they arrive at the wedding venue.

PWP understand the importance of baraat and we promise you that we arrange the best Band, Ghodi for you and make your wedding more joyful and special.

GUEST MANAGEMENT

During the earlier years, every family member played a vital role in the conduct of marriage by offering their advice. Wedding planning can be stressful. It doesn't have to be, though—you have the support of family and friends before, on, and after your wedding day. Make sure to include your guests in your planning and the ceremony with our eight creative ideas. The present day living and working conditions do not allow such a luxury. Furthermore, the contemporary marriage participants are not experienced in handling such situations to offer help.

As a professional wedding planner PWP is well equipped with service personnel to handle any situation in a marriage with ease. Our guest reception services start at the entry point, continue in all the places where your guests need help and end only when your guests leave the marriage hall on the conclusion of the marriage.
